

Melda N. Yildiz is a global scholar, assessment and curriculum consultant, instructional designer, author, and entrepreneur. Yildiz served as a Fulbright Scholar in Turkmenistan (2009) and Azerbaijan (2016), teaching and conducting research integrating new media and technologies in P16 classrooms. She worked as a media specialist and the director of media services at Northfield Mount Hermon School and taught media literacy and production to grades 9–12.

As a teacher educator, she taught Media Literacy Education, Multimedia Production, and Educational Technology to P-16 educators and teacher candidates at William Paterson University and Kean University in New Jersey. Yildiz taught as a national faculty at Lesley University, as a contributing faculty to Walden University, and as a visiting scholar at Abant Izzet Baysal University and Mehmet Akif University. She worked as the director of assessment and accreditation and as a program reviewer, and site visitor for StarTalk: National Security Language Initiative (NSLI).

Yildiz was a research fellow at Oxford University. She co-authored, published, and presented on Media and Information Literacy, Instructional Technology, Transforming Teacher Education, and Global and Multicultural Education at national and international conferences. She served as the president of New Jersey Fulbright Chapter Association and co-president of New Jersey Women Gender Studies Consortium.

Yildiz received an Ed.D. from University of Massachusetts, Amherst, in Math & Science and Instructional Technology and an M.S. from Southern Connecticut State University in Instructional Technology. She majored in Teaching English as a Foreign Language at Bogazici University, Istanbul, Turkey.